2017 Guide

Cheese

IT'S THE MOST EXPENSIVE INGREDIENT ON PIZZA, SO UNDERSTANDING IT'S PERFORMANCE IS KEY TO YOUR SUCCESS.

Higher fat cheeses - whole milk mozzarella, provolone, cheddar, etc. release more oil/fat for creamier appearance and more buttery flavor. Lower fat cheeses like part-skim mozzarella release less oil/fat and have a less buttery taste. Cheeses that melt the best are relatively high in moisture and fat. Mozzarella provides the best stretch for pizza and adding a little Cheddar will produce a more golden color.

OVER-MELT is a symptom that cheese is at the end of its shelf life. UNDER-MELT occurs typically when cheese is too young or less than 25-45 days old, the ideal age of pizza cheese.

FREEZING of fresh cheese is not recommended. Moisture will be lost and performance will be effected.

COVERAGE Make sure pizza is fully covered to prevent a transparent appearance which suggests a smaller portion to the customer.

If you want to increase your yield for made-from-scratch "secret recipes" use diced, chopped, crushed or ground tomatoes instead of whole peeled tomatoes.

Labels of tomato paste and puree may list specific gravity. Specific gravity refers to the weight of product compared to water. Higher solid content will have a higher specific gravity and the product is thicker. Thicker products may cost more per case, but they provide a higher yield and you are not paying for the added water!

PREPARED PIZZA SAUCE provides consistency, but check to make sure the product uses fresh tomatoes (crushed, cooked and packed) or remanufactured (cooked, packed in bulk, diluted, cooked again then packed) to achieve the quality you want.

ASK THREE PEOPLE TO NAME THEIR FAVORITE PIZZA TOPPINGS, and you'll likely hear three very different versions of topping combinations. While traditional toppings such as pepperoni, sausage, mushrooms have always been pizza-lover favorites, anchovies, pineapple and black or green olives top other customer's lists. New toppings can excite customers and bring them into a pizza restaurant more frequently.

Foodies are always on the lookout to try new things, and pizza toppings give them millions of combinations from which to sample. These customers yearn to try something different each time they order, which is the inspiration behind offering unique, limited-time-only toppings. They are a great way to test new toppings and give customers variety without getting stuck with a load of product that won't sell. New toppings can excite customers and bring them back more frequently. Try these toppings for those more adventurous....

Dough & Yeast

Too much yeast, too high of a storage temperature or too long of a fermentation time can cause OVER-PROOFING. The opposite of too little/dead yeast, storage temperatures too cold or too little fermentation time can cause UNDER-PROOFING. Remember to warm dough balls to around 60°-70°F before using and let the dough relax for 30 minutes after mixing.

FLAT BREADS

Flatbreads are the hot trend on menus today and with more customers wanting smaller "sample" portions, flat bread pizzas fit that niche. They are also great opportunity to test more adventuresome topping combinations.

4462	Rich's Rustic Flatbread Oval 12X5	48/4.8 oz

FLOUR & YEAST

High-gluten flour works best for hand-tossed pizza and provides a crisper and chewier crust. Bread flour has less chew and all-purpose flour will have a tender crust. Keep in mind there is no standard for protein (gluten) levels and one brand's high-gluten might be another's all-purpose.

Gluten Free

Gluten Free has become more than just a buzz word, it's a part of every restaurateur's life! Some customers may choose to not have gluten while for others it is necessary. Make sure you can keep these customers satisfied. Many of these gluten free options are fully cooked and just require a microwave; eliminating cross contact issues. Ask your sales rep for the Understanding Gluten Free guide for an explanation on maintaining a facility for these patrons.

USING TECHNOLOGY TO DRAW MILLENNIALS IN

Millennials reflect a rising tide of restaurant buying power, says Hudson Riehle, senior vice president of the NRA's Research and Knowledge Group. "In the past, diners came to restaurants—now information-savvy millennials want restaurants to come to them."

They're not tied down to desktop computers. About 90% use tablets or digital phones, compared with about 60% of consumers between 45 and 64, and only 34% of those age 65 and up.

While this attachment to technology has shortened millennials' attention spans, it has not made them cold and distant. Instead it has intensified a desire of connectedness and transparency among them.

Highlight your social responsibility: Millennials are socially aware and responsible and connect with brands that support sustainability and give back to the community. Don't overemphasize "green" and recycling; they already expect these as ground-level efforts. Instead emphasize organic, locally sourced, etc. Learn easy tips and best practices by joining Conserve (www.conserve.restaurant.org).

Show you're digitally integrated: Use table tents with QR codes and offer free wireless Internet to accommodate their drive for connection. Provide access to texted promotions and "check-in" specials, as well as the ability to communicating with your brand on the Web.

Offer novelty: Millennials are drawn to new ideas, creativity, innovative design and graphics that move. Offer samples of your latest food and beverage items at your point-of-purchase counter as well.

Communicate with a warm, personal tone: When reaching out to millennials, consider using emotive stories and anecdotes instead of statistics. Keep your messages clear and direct. Also ensure that your communications reflect their diversity.

Maximize your social networking: Have an engaging online presence including interactive Twitter and Facebook profiles. Run any promotions across all social media platforms. Include calls to action that allow millennials to interact with your brand.

Encourage word-of-mouth recommendations: Millennials greatly value friends' opinions when making decisions. Because referrals are so rampant among them, you can consider spending less on new marketing and capitalizing more on their existing customer base.
