Ways to Re-use Coffee Grounds

COOKING Coffee grounds can be used in cooking in several different ways. Grounds can be added to marinades and will give meat a nice flavor and also help to tenderize. Coffee grounds can also be added to dishes such as chili and chocolate cake to enhance flavors.

GARDEN - Grounds are very acidic and when spread over flower beds of plants that thrive on acid such as hydrangeas, and azaleas, it helps to create healthy plants. Used grounds actually release nitrogen as they degrade which makes for very rich compost.

Do's & Dont's

- Check your water source for softened or hard water. If necessary, run water through a water treatment filter.
- Keep all coffee stored in a clean, dry place away from heat registers, vents or extreme cold for maximum freshness.
- Know the correct operation of your coffee brewing equipment for maximum performance.
- Make sure decanters and/or pots used at serving stations are kept clean every day.
- Dispose of filter and grounds immediately after brewing to prevent drip-through of unwanted flavors trapped in used coffee grounds.
- Clean your brewing equipment regularly (especially the spray head area) at least once a week.

- Mix fresh brewed coffee with previously brewed coffee. It will dilute the taste and affect the flavor of the whole pot.
- Re-use coffee grounds since all the flavor has been extracted.
- Re-heat any coffee for serving that has dropped to a temperature below 175°F.
- Serve coffee using beans or ground coffee past the freshness date.
- Let coffee "bake" on a serving station or brewer. 20 to 30 minutes is the maximum time for an open pot.
- Serve coffee in pots or decanters that haven't been properly cleaned — acids and other organic materials can taint even the best brewed coffee.

💧 Remember to use 2 to 4 ounces of coffee for every 1/2 gallon of water 💧
