GLOSSARY

BÂTARD A long, wide, crusty French loaf—similar in crust and crumb, but wider than a baguette—that can be sliced for sandwiches.

BRIOCHE A light, slightly sweet loaf or roll made with eggs, yeast and butter, and glazed with an egg wash.

CIABATTA Italian wheat loaf with a porous crumb, made with yeast. It is baked in a variety of styles, depending on the region - the crispness of the crust and the density of the crumb will vary. It is a popular sandwich bread, used for panini.

FOCACCIA A rich, thick Italian snack bread. Olive oil is brushed over the dough prior to baking, to retain moisture. While it uses yeast to rise, it is not kneaded and is a relatively flat bread, often an inch or so in height.

FRENCH BREAD French bread is a term that applies to a variety of different-shaped loaves that have a crusty exterior and a chewy crumb. French bread is typically made from wheat flour, water, yeast and salt.

ITALIAN BREAD In general, Italian bread is similar to French bread (also a generic term), but the loaves are shorter and plumper, while French loaves are longer and narrower.

JEWISH RYE BREAD Jewish rye is a light rye bread, a mix of wheat and rye flours. Often, caraway seeds are included for extra flavor.

NAAN Naan, which means “bread” in Persian, is a flatbread similar to the original, pocketless pita. It is usually leavened with yeast and baked in a tandoor (clay oven).

PITA Pita takes the form of both a thick flatbread and a pocket bread consisting of a double layer of flatbread. Pita is traditional bread in many Middle Eastern cuisines, and in Mediterranean cuisines from Africa to Greece.

PULLMAN LOAF Also known as a sandwich loaf, is a white or whole wheat bread baked in a long, narrow, lidded pan; The lid creates a flat top and even rectangles for making sandwiches (as opposed to a curved top crust).

PUMPERNICKEL BREAD Is a dark, dense rye bread, made from crushed or ground rye grains. It can be dark brown to almost black.

RYE BREAD A bread made from rye flour, which is higher in fiber and denser than wheat bread, and stronger in flavor. The bread is usually made with a sourdough starter and may be baked with caraway seeds for additional flavor.

SOURDOUGH Sourdough is a method of baking using lactic-acid producing bacteria (lactobacillus) that produce a characteristic sour taste and aroma. The sour taste comes from the lactobacillus, which lives in symbiosis with the yeast, feeding on the byproducts of the yeast fermentation.

WHOLE WHEAT BREAD Whole-wheat bread is made from whole-wheat flour. Unlike white flour, whole wheat has not been refined; the bran and germ of the wheat grain, which contain most of the nutrition and fiber, have been retained prior to milling. Bread made from whole-wheat flour is light brown in color.
